

T. Randall Fortenbery

Randy is professor and Thomas B. Mick Endowed Chair in the School of Economic Sciences, and Co-Director of the IMPACT Center, at Washington State University. Through August 2020 he served as Chairman of the Ag Markets Advisory Committee to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the agency responsible for oversight of U.S. derivative markets. His research focuses on agricultural markets and price performance, influence of futures trading on the stability of cash prices, and international market development, and trade.

Prior to Washington State University, Randy was at the University of Wisconsin-Madison from 1992-1997, and 1999-2011 in the Department of Agricultural and Applied Economics (1992-2011), and the School of Business (2001-2011). Early on he was the Extension grain marketing specialist, and taught several courses related to agricultural marketing. In 2001, he was awarded the Renk Endowed Chair in Agribusiness, and served as the Associate Director of the Wisconsin Bioenergy Initiative. He continued to teach in the Ag and Applied Economics Department, but also taught in the Finance Department at the UW-Madison School of Business.

From 1998 through 1999 Randy was Director of Research for Frontier Risk Management, a Chicago futures trading company that manages speculative funds and is a risk management consultant and broker to some of the largest agribusiness firms in the U.S.

Between 1988 and 1992 Randy was an Assistant Professor of Economics at North Carolina State University. He received his Ph.D. in Agricultural Economics from the University of Illinois-Urbana/Champaign, and his B.S. and M.S. in Applied Economics from Montana State University.
